The New York Herald publishes a letter of General Lee to his sister, written when he resigned his commission, intending never to wear the sword again, except in defense of his native State. Lee did not approve secession. He was a Union man at the start and for some time after.

Both the Herald and Times take occasion to sneer at State rights. They are persistent in the estimation of these journalists. Their diatribe comments will convince all men who understand our institutions that these editors know nothing about the system of government we have always had until the advent of the present party to power.

The States made the Federal Government, and it is the power it can properly exercise, and implicitly and explicitly reserving all other power to the States and the people. Our Statesmen, until lately, had always supposed that the States had rights that no department of the Federal Government could transgress. New party light, however, has disposed of State rights. They are only fit to be laughed at. The necessities of the Government the States made may absorb all the powers not granted, and leave the States only in history. We can't see from these scribbles that the States have any rights at all that the Federal Government is bound to respect. Still New York elects a Governor and a Legislature, and goes through the formality of making laws, as if the States were something real. On the present theory, we might save a great deal of expense. State taxes add hundreds of millions to the burdens of the people. State courts and institutions had better be dispensed with, if the theory be true, if the States have no rights that the Federal Government can't touch. We think it would be better to dispense with the complicated machinery we have had and supply our Government.

This machinery has been constructed on the theory that the States were to be respected, and their sphere, which no power could interfere with. State Constitutions and State laws were serious realities which Federal authorities were bound to respect. They had a right, like all other sovereigns, to judge of the extent of their own power, subject only to judicial revision, as the Federal Government itself. We suppose these scribbles would admit this, for it is too plainly written to be denied, and then they would proceed to sneer at State rights, as usual now with them.

The Times has a curious argument against State rights. They have been brought to the test of war by the rebels and failed. The rebel Government at Richmond have, by taxation and conscription, overriden all State rights. If the rebel Government don't respect the rights of States, then they must be a failure. So, also, if the rebel government establish a despotism, then republicanism is a failure, and it had as well be given up. Davis & Co., like the Times & Co., have sacrificed right to their necessities. All free institutions have failed the same way. Usurpers and demagogues, with the cry of freedom on their lips, have established despotisms.

Because rights are not respected by men in power, is no proof that the right does not exist. We should hardly agree to trust the fate of free government to an experiment made by Davis & Co. We should be slow to depend on experiments made just now in these insane revolutionary times as to the merits or value of any institution for the protection of any rights, either of States or persons.

We don't think that the men at Washington or the men at Richmond are competent experimenters. They don't understand the subject. One side does not see State rights at all, and the other started out holding States to be independent nations. No wonder if both fail.

We grant that the Federal Government has a right to protect its just powers by force, and it is equally true that a State has a right to protect its reserved powers by force. Nor is it a judicial trial to decide the case and a public opinion to appeal to in peace if judges should err. The sword is a miserable article in such a case. Might does not make right. Nor does the verdict of numbers settle what is the best security for free institutions.

The reserved rights of States are at last the very pillars of free government in this country. They will not be sneered down or crushed out. If smothered for a time, they can't be destroyed.

The New York Tribune condemns the offer of large bounties in that city, and in the course of the article states that recruits are furnished from the lists of felons and criminals, who, by means of their attorneys, escape the State prison by enlisting in the army. The Tribune says a large portion of recruits, if not the larger portion from that city, are of that class. That is a sorry account to give of the material of our armies. Some States have hunted the world for foreigners and negroes to fill their quotas. The armies of the West are generally of a different sort, which, perhaps, accounts for their success. Such troops as the Tribune describes are nothing for any cause. They will fight on either side for pay, or to escape the just penalty of their evil deeds. They would be just the material for a military usurper in an opportunity offered.

During the past year the enormous sum of twenty-eight millions five hundred and twenty-two thousand dollars was lost by fire in the loyal States.

A German woman in St. Paul, Minn., split her two children's heads open with hatchet and then very properly cut her own throat.

Mr. Phillips is speaking upon reconstruction. We know of no one who needs it more than Wendell.

One man in New York pays an income tax on five millions of dollars.

The Dead of the Year.

The year just closing has witnessed the deaths of many persons distinguished in the walks of art, science, letters and all the liberal professions. Thackeray, Hawthorne, Morris, Lander, Schoenfeld, M. S. Kirkland and others are lost to literature. Stillman, Hitchcock and many others are lost to the world.

Who may appoint a general court martial? 1. The President of the United States, whose orders, in this respect, are usually issued in the name of the Secretary of War. 2. A general officer commanding an army. 3. A Colonel commanding a separate Department. 4. In time of war, the Commander of a Division or separate Brigade. 5. The Commander of a Post or District having no brigade organization, where the command is composed of mixed troops (infantry to a Brigade, and the Commander of the Department or Army designates it in order as a "separate brigade." A copy of such order must accompany the proceedings of the court martial convened by such brigade commander.

ACTION OF THE AUTHORITY THAT APPOINTED THE COURT ON THE RECORD OF ITS PROCEEDINGS.

No action of a General Court Martial shall be carried into execution until after the whole proceedings shall have been laid before the officer ordering the same, or the officer commanding the troops for the time being, for his action. If the proceedings are approved by him, and he is legal authority to order the execution of the sentence, he should issue the order in the name of the President, and forward the record to the Secretary of War.

A disapproval of the proceedings by the appointing authority nullifies the sentence, and the accused is thereupon entitled to be released from arrest, and, if an officer or soldier, to be restored to duty. The disapproval may, however, be made in the name of the President, and the record and proceedings may be forwarded to the Secretary of War.
